

Camila Rojas is completing her Master of Science degree in Tourism Management at the University of Georgia. Her research is mainly focused on community empowerment and governance in protected areas. She hopes to continue addressing and exploring the environmental and social issues of tourism through research, education, and community engagement.