

Courtney Hotchkiss is a PhD student at North Carolina State University in the department of Parks, Recreation & Tourism Management. Her research is with the National Park Service to help create a framework for climate change adaptation planning for archaeological sites. She engages with Tribal Citizens to determine how to co-produce knowledge for the framework. Before going back to graduate school, Courtney worked for the Maryland Historical Trust, the National Park Service, and earned an MA in World Heritage Studies from BTU Cottbus in Germany.