

Peizhe Li is finishing his Bachelors of Tourism Development and Management at the School of Community Resources of Arizona State University. His research interests include climate adaptation planning for cultural resources, tourists' stress coping strategies and innovative methodologies for travel behaviors. He has presented tourism-related research in many international academic conferences and received research awards as an outstanding undergraduate student. He hopes to continue addressing and exploring environmental and social issues of tourism through research, education, and community engagement.